ABSTRACT

Based on data collected by the American Association of Junior Colleges (AAJC), this directory provides information on 596 junior colleges in the United States and its territories, Canada, and other selected countries for 1954-55. Following introductory material on the scope of the directory, tables provide statewide summaries of the following data for all junior colleges, and for public and private junior colleges: number of colleges, AAJC membership, student enrollments and status, and numbers of full- and part-time faculty. Next, the directory lists the colleges alphabetically by state, providing the following information for each: location; administrative head; AAJC membership; state recognition or accrediting agency; type of control or affiliation; co-educational or single-sex status; date founded; enrollments for 1954-55 broken down by freshman, sophomore, or unclassified status, adult enrollments, and full- or part-time status; and full- and part-time faculty members. The following sections provide a list of individual AAJC members; an alphabetical listing of junior colleges; a directory of national and regional junior college organizations; and a directory of junior college honorary societies and social organizations. Finally, an analysis of junior college growth reviews changes in the number of colleges and enrollments from 1900 to 1954, the size and location of colleges, faculty numbers, types of colleges and forms of control, and accreditation agencies. The Directory contains information about junior colleges in the United States, its territories, Canada and a few other nations. The list comprises both accredited and non-accredited institutions. In general, institutions have not been included when they have not been designated as junior colleges by state departments of education. Every reasonable effort has been made to secure accurate information about each college. In this undertaking heavy reliance has been placed on the accuracy of the reporting junior college.

Separately organized junior colleges, general colleges, or lower-divisions of four-year colleges and universities have been included only if they are active members of the American Association of Junior Colleges. Undergraduate centers and extension centers, as in Pennsylvania and Wisconsin, are included in the listings in view of the fact that they are essentially two-year colleges and doing about the same kind of educational work as junior-community colleges.

More extensive and detailed information about junior colleges may be secured in American Junior Colleges, fourth edition, edited by Jesse P. Bogue, and published by the American Council on Education, 1785 Massachusetts Avenue, N.W., Washington 6, D.C., 1956.

Definition of Terms

Administrative Head. Each institution's designation of its administrative head has been accepted. The official title has been indicated following the name. It is assumed that this person is the one to whom correspondence should be addressed. It is not implied that in all cases the designated administrative head holds final administrative responsibility for the college.

Accreditation. The American Association of Junior Colleges does not act as an accrediting agency. Member institutions are prohibited by constitutional provisions from indicating, implying, or publicizing accreditation by this Association. Types of accreditation or equivalent recognition or approval are indicated by symbols as follows:

State Department of Education; the Board of Education in the District of Columbia; the Junior College Accrediting Commission in Mississippi; the Provincial Department of Education in Canada.

D—Indicates accreditation by the above

D^1—Indicates approval to operate as a junior college

Type. Three main types are distinguished: Coeducational, for men only, and for women only indicated by C., M., and W., respectively. Negro junior colleges are indicated by "N" following the name of the institution.

Control. The primary basis for classification is twofold: institutions publicly controlled and institutions privately controlled. The first group is divided into state, local or municipal, union district, county, and joint county junior colleges; the second into those under denominational control or affiliation, non-denominational and nonprofit institutions, and proprietary institutions. Year Organized. Each institution was asked to report the year it was organized as a junior college. In some cases the date of origin of an institution which later developed into a junior college may have been given.

Enrollment. Enrollment data are given for the year June 1, 1953, to May 31, 1954, unless otherwise stated. A "special student" is defined as a student who is not classified as either a freshman or sophomore because he is carrying less than a full-time load but who can be considered to be working toward a degree, diploma, or certificate. An "adult student" is defined as one who is above the compulsory school age and who would not be classified as a freshman, sophomore or special student.

Faculty. The number of faculty is given for the same year as the student enrollment. The full-time faculty equivalent total is the sum of the full-time faculty and the full-time equivalent of the part-time faculty.

Membership. Membership in the American Association of Junior Colleges is indicated by an "M" or a "P" depending upon whether the membership is full or provisional. Active membership is open to any college which has received complete accreditation or equivalent recognition of any of the types indicated under "accreditation" above. Provisional membership is open to newly organized institutions and to others which have not yet received such recognition.

Errata

1. Pasadena City College is a two-year institution.
2. Pennsylvania State University Centers are not "Undergraduate Centers" as they are listed in this Directory.
3. The Farmingdale, New York, Agricultural and Technical Institute is a member of the Association. The Institute of Agriculture and Home Economics at Cobleskill is not a member.
4. Los Angeles City College's total registration for the year 1954–55 was 40,451. Registrations listed in the Directory of 5,546 were for the summer session only. For the year total freshmen registrations were 24,356, sophomore 15,095.

Analysis of Junior College Growth

JESSE P. BOGUE

THE PURPOSE of the analysis of growth in junior colleges is to give the reader a rather quick view of what has happened to the movement from its inception to the present time. It is common knowledge that all forms of education from the elementary schools through the graduate departments of the universitites have experienced great expansions since the year 1900. Moreover, the percentages of students enrolled in the various levels of education in relation to the total population's ages for those levels have constantly increased. For example, in 1900 only four per cent of college age youth were in higher education. In 1954–55 this percentage had increase to 33. It is predicted by some authorities that there will be about 50 per cent of college age youth in higher education by 1971.

The growth of junior colleges is, therefore, part and parcel of the general movement for more people to pursue further education and for the percentages in various age groups to enter and remain in school. In this respect the junior college movement is not especially unique. It reflects the general trends in all education in the United States.

As to predictions, it is of interest to note that enrollments in the fall of 1955, according to the U. S. Office of Education, reached the highest peak in the history of this nation with 2,720,929. Predictions made by Ronald B. Thompson[1] in 1954 were that enrollments would reach 2,505,206. Actual enrollments exceeded those predicted by more than 215,000! The rather amazing fact about the increasing enrollments during the past two years is that they came from those years during which the birth rates were at a low ebb. There were, for instance, 500,000 fewer young people of college age in 1954 than in 1939.

As is shown in Table IV, junior colleges have shared in the remarkable record of increasing collegiate enrollments since the year 1900. If the past record is indicative of future expansions, junior colleges will share responsibility in ever increasing numbers for the future. Between the years 1939 and 1954, for example, degree-granting public institutions increased by 80.9 per cent, degree-granting private institutions increased by 76.3 per cent, public non-degree granting institutions increased by 144.4 per cent, and private non-degree institutions increased by 25.7 per cent. The foregoing data are from the U. S. Office of Education. Table VI in this analysis reflects the same general results, although percentages may be somewhat different, that the public junior and community colleges are showing the greatest percentages in increased enrollments of any segment of higher education.

[1] Ronald B. Thompson, The Impending Tidal Wave of Students, 1954, American Association of Collegiate Registrars and Admissions Officers. His estimate was based on "no further increase in percentage of college-age youth attending our colleges." The base used by Thompson was 31 per cent.

NUMBER OF COLLEGES AND ENROLLMENTS

The number of colleges and enrollments in 1900 are estimates only. Compilations made in 1915 were by F. M. McDowell, those in 1922 and again in 1927 by L. V. Koos. Since 1930, data have been secured and published annually by the American Association of Junior Colleges. It will be readily seen that while the number of colleges in 1946–47 was 663, the highest in the history of the movement, enrollments then were more than 200,000 less than in 1954–55, and even fewer than in any year following 1946–47. One aspect of the growth, therefore, has been in the numbers of students in the established colleges since that year and also since 1939–40 when there were 610 junior colleges.

For the 1956 Directory, 13 colleges are not reported which were in the 1955 issue. One of these represents a change in name and organization, namely, Grant Technical in California to American River. Four of them became senior colleges and 8 were closed because segregation was locally abolished or for other reasons. The names of 11 colleges appear in the 1956 Directory which were not in the 1955 issue. With the exception of American River all of these are new institutions. There are 15 colleges listed outside the continental United States which enrolled 4,809 students. Of this number 3,176 students are from institutions in Canada and Alaska.

Table V indicates the growth of junior colleges by types of institutions from 1900 to 1954. In 1947–48 the number of public and private colleges was exactly the same. Since that time the number of public colleges has increased to the point where they stand at 56 per cent of the total and the private, 44 per cent. One reason for this change since 1947–48 is to be found in an actual increase of the public institutions from 328 to 336. Another reason is the decrease in private institutions by the omission of a considerable number of junior business colleges from listings in the annual Directory.

Table VI gives the enrollments by years from 1900 to 1954–55. The two types of colleges were about equal in enrollments until 1917. Since that year the public colleges have been increasing more rapidly in actual numbers and percentages than the private colleges. However, during the year 1954–55 the private colleges held to the same percentage of enrollments which they had in 1953–54, namely 11 per cent. To a considerable degree the increasing enrollments in public colleges may be found in the rapid increase of special and adult students, although full-time enrollments have also grown with great rapidity.

Tables VII and VIII show the breakdown of enrollments by classifications. It will be observed that students classified as special and as adults were listed merely as "others" until 1947–48. This form of reporting is carried out in Table VII for comparative purposes. Table VIII gives further information on classifications which were begun in 1947–48. It will be observed that while the increase in total enrollments for 1954–55 compared to the previous year was 11.8 per cent, increases in special students were 15.9 per cent and for adults, 13.8 per cent.

regions in the United States and outside of the United States. There were 10 colleges in 1953–54 with enrollments of more than 9,000 students. For the present Directory this number is 12 colleges. Several other categories in enrollments by size have changed from 1953–54 to 1954–55. Readers sufficiently interested in these changes may make comparisons between the two reports as found in the Directory for 1955 and in the present issue. Different regions of the United States show certain marked differences in the size of enrollments and Table X may be studied for this purpose. For example, the Western Region includes the state of California only for the American Association of Junior Colleges. In this state there are 57 colleges with enrollments of 500 or more students, and practically all junior colleges with more than 9,000 students are in California. In the regions, notably New England, where the great majority of colleges are privately controlled, enrollments are naturally smaller in numbers than in those where public colleges predominate.

NUMBER OF FACULTY

Table I, Summaries of all Colleges by States, shows that the number of faculty members on a full-time basis increased from 12,473 in 1953–54 to 13,277 in 1954–55. Part-time faculty members increased from 11,289 to 12,092, and the equivalent full-time faculty members increased from 16,-143 to 17,219. It is evident, therefore, that the need for more competent teachers is just as serious a problem with junior colleges as it is with all other levels of education.

predominate among classifications of colleges on the basis of admissions by sex. More than 80 per cent of the colleges are co-educational and account for the vast majority of students. Also, the two-year college greatly exceeds any and all other types of schools in terms of years included. From the current Directory it may be observed that the two-year colleges number 569 compared to 560 the previous year. There are only five one-year colleges compared to eight the previous year; three-year colleges remain the same; and the four-year institutions have dropped from 27 in 1953–54 to 19 in 1954–55. In terms of the prevailing type of college, therefore, the two-year, co-educational institution is far ahead of any other category.

TYPES OF CONTROL

It may be of interest to the reader to know how independent and church-related colleges are controlled and the comparative enrollments by these classifications. More than one-third are non-profit and independent, and the remainder are associated in one way or another with various religious bodies. Roman Catholics have the largest number of junior colleges (46) but the Baptists have nearly twice the enrollments (in 27 institutions) as the Catholics or any other church body.

The largest number of students enrolled by any group may be found in the non-profit, independent colleges with 37,143.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION MEMBERSHIP

As of this writing there are 449 active institutional members in the American Association of Junior Colleges and six provisional members, or a total of 445. Following the tabulation of the 1956 Directory, a few more colleges filed applications for membership. By examining Table I the reader will find information regarding the number of members from each state compared to the total number of colleges in the state. There are 14 states with all of their colleges enrolled as members, but the number of colleges in each of these states is small. Some of the states with larger numbers of colleges have excellent records of membership and support for the Association.

ACCREDITATION

Approximately two-thirds of the junior colleges in the United States are accredited by a regional association. Practically all colleges have some kind of accreditation, or equivalent recognition by state departments of education, state commissions for junior colleges, or by state universities. In a few states there are no legal bodies holding responsibility for accrediting or approving junior colleges except for programs which prepare school teachers. In these cases, the state departments of education almost always act as approving agencies. The American Association of Junior Colleges is not in any sense an accrediting agency. It works with the colleges in a professional capacity to assist them to obtain accreditation by the various regional associations of colleges and secondary schools.

DEVELOPMENT BY REGIONS AND STATES

Table XI is designed to give the reader information about the manner in which the colleges have developed by number of institutions and enrollments over the years from 1929–30 to 1954–55. For those who are interested in learning the names of the states included in the regional accrediting associations, Table XI will serve this purpose.
